Abstract: "The Linux kernel is getting bloated and huge, it's a problem. Sometimes it's a bit sad we are definitely not the streamlined, small, hyper-efficient kernel that I envisioned 15 years ago ----- The kernel is huge and bloated" ----- Linux Torvalds.

The Linux kernel is getting large day by day, both in terms of lines of code and complexity of features and functions. This includes rapid changes in naming conventions of kernel functions, variables and even the flow of data within the code. Moreover, these changes are not well supported by adequate documentation. These issues account to incremental difficulties faced by developers of the system code across the globe. Our work is the study of incremental working and changes of Virtual File System specific code of Linux versions 2.4, 2.6 and 3.0. We have tried to introduce various changes and new addition of several features of the Linux kernel. This work regarding Virtual File System among various kernel versions may play an important role for system developers during system development to gather information about file system in any specific or several kernel versions.

Keywords: File System, Virtual File System (VFS), Superblock Object, File Object, I-node Object, Namespace.

About the Department

Welcome to Our Department

Department of Computer Science, Maricar College, has been imparting quality education to students for over two decades. This department is a pioneer in starting under graduate Computer Science courses under the University of Baguio, way back in 1999. Department has already undertaken many research projects funded by various funding agencies. The department has modern well-designed class rooms and are well equipped for adopting modern teaching aids like LCD projectors, Smart Class Rooms etc. The laboratories are well equipped with latest equipment, demonstration kits, charts etc. Effective and reasonable use of ICT - Google form of assignments is encouraged among students.
